THE CHINESE MIN-ISTER AT LONDON.

Sir Chih Chen Lofengluh, the Chinese minister to London, Brussels and Rome, is a knight commander of the Royal Victorian order. He is 50 years old. He was educated privately by his father, Lo Shao Tsung, a distinguished scholar of Foochow, South China, and at the Imperial Naval college, Pagoda Anchorage, River Min. His published works include a life of George Wash- | nied Earl Li on his congratulatory emington in Chinese, and he is preparing | bassy to the coronation of the czar a life of the same man in English, and on his subsequent European and Lofengluh professes great admiration | American tour in 1896. The natives drink in this manner at all times, but on festive occasions they split up into parties and compete one against the other. The reason why the grog is served through a hole in this manner is because the hard and fast law of cast touch anything that a man of different caste has handled. The pot, which contains about three quarts, is first held quite close to the mouth, though not coming into actual contact with it; and then, taking his finger away, the server allows the grog to flow into the man's mouth, raising the pot higher and higher in order to put a head

CHINESE BABY TOWER

The baby tower here illustrated emphasizes the much talked of cruelty of the Chinese. Here a very large per cent of the female infants of their country are consigned to die. These towers are found in many parts of China, but nowhere else in larger numbers than in Fukien province, where this picture was taken. It has been estimated that from 25 to 40 per cent, in some sections, of all the female babies born are put to death. There is no law against infanticide, at least none that is enforced, al though there is a sort of maxim that a reward will be meted out to all who preserve the lives of their daughters. This reward lies in the kindness and love the daughters show in after life to their parents, for it is true that the love and affection of the sons in China is not to be compared to that of the daughters. There are different methods of dis-
